The two Ebbsfleets in Kent

Keith Briggs (pp. 5–9)

This article is from the Journal of the English Place-Name Society, an annual peer-reviewed journal issued free to members of the Society. The Journal welcomes contributions of articles and notes on subjects of relevance to English place-names.

The English Place-Name Society (EPNS) was established in 1923 to conduct a county-by-county survey of the place-names of England. To date, the Survey has produced 90 volumes. Almost all English counties have been surveyed, at least in part, and work to complete the Survey is ongoing. The Survey is used by researchers, academics, and those interested in the origins, meaning, and significance of English place-names.

The research work and the publication of the Survey are financed by the annual subscriptions of members of the Society, with the help of grants from the Arts and Humanities Research Council and the British Academy. Since the progress and success of the Survey depend largely upon the strength of the membership, the Society always welcomes new members, both personal and institutional.

In return for the annual subscription, members receive free of charge the current issue of the Journal as well as the volume of the Survey allocated to that year's subscription. They are entitled to order, in addition, any available volume of the Survey at a concessionary price. Associate Members pay a reduced subscription, for which they receive the Journal.

Annual subscription prices (correct as of April 2017):

Within the UK

£40 (full)

£15 (associate)

Outside the UK

£45 (full)*

£18 (associate*)

*increased prices reflect increased postage cost.

The two Ebbsfleets in Kent

Keith Briggs

Ebbsfleet is a modern form of the name of the assumed landing-place of the first Anglo-Saxons in east Kent, usually associated with the current Ebbsfleet Farm 5km north of Sandwich, on Pegwell Bay (grid reference TR 331630). But there is now a new town of Ebbsfleet Valley in west Kent, immediately south of Swanscombe and east of the Bluewater retail park (TQ 594733); the new railway station nearby is called Ebbsfleet International (TQ 613741). This note will attempt to explain why the same name has been applied to these two distinct places, despite the 75km separation (Figure 1).

Ebbsfleet in east Kent

Garmonsway's translation of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle (ASC) has under the year 449: "Hengest and Horsa . . . came to Britain at a place which is called Ypwinesfleot [Ebbsfleet, K]".¹ We note that, because there are two Ebbsfleets, Garmonsway's identification in square brackets is ambiguous.

DEPN has an entry for Ebbsfleet, but also does not say which one is meant. This is despite the fact that Ordnance Survey maps have marked both Ebbsfleets since at least the 1870s (Figures 2, 3). The more recent place-name dictionaries do not list Ebbsfleet at all.² A recent work on early Kent by Brookes and Harrington does explicitly recognize the two Ebbsfleets, but gives an incorrect etymology ‘Ebba’s creek’.³

This ancient Ebbsfleet has an uncertain etymology. An early form æt Hyppeles fleote appears in a charter of King Harold of 1037×1040 (Sawyer 1467). This makes Ekwall think it is ‘hip-well fleet’, the creek of the stream where (rose-)hips grow, and that the Ypwinesfleot in the ASC is a result of miscopying (DEPN s.n.). Wallenberg has a rather complete discussion of the name, and gives these additional early forms amongst others:⁴

Heopwines Fleot ASC A, 9th century, de Heppesflete 13th de Eppesflete 13th
Ipelisflete 1240
Heppesflete 1280
Heppelflete 1281

Wallenberg's preferred etymology is OE hȳpel, a derivative of hȳpe, hēap 'heap' recorded as a gloss for 'cumulus',⁵ and so the referent is a small hill. He thinks another possibility is a word hypel, related to the words for 'hip (body part)' and 'rose-hip'. Cullen also reviews these alternative proposals but does not express a preference for any particular one.⁶

We perhaps should note that the equation of the landing-place in ASC with this place recorded from the 10th century onwards is not absolutely certain, especially as the ASC has only -n- forms such as Heopwines Fleot, while the later forms all have only -l- or zero in the middle syllable.

Ebbsfleet in west Kent

This name appears on old OS maps for the stream flowing north from Springhead, and joining the Thames at Northfleet (Figure 3). It does not appear at all on recent OS maps. It is also the site of the Roman settlement of Vagniacae.⁷

I strongly suspect that this name was invented by the antiquary Thomas Philipott in the 17th century, because he believed that the landing-site of Hengest and Horsa was in west Kent, and this belief was based on the fact that in 456 Hengest was at Crecganford (Crayford, ASC pp. 12–13), which is near this western Ebbsfleet, and because the name Northfleet already existed in this spot. Philipott thus generalized from the ‘fleet’ element. I cannot prove all of this, but there is good evidence for the invention of the name. It is also clear that Philipott associated the element Ebb- with the ebbing of tides. He was no doubt aware of the ASC form Ypwinesfleot, without knowing where this was located. We thus have an explanation of the modern Ebb-, which would otherwise be an irregular development.

Philipott’s Villare cantianum of 1659 has this paragraph about Swanscombe, which I suspect contains the earliest application of the name Ebbsfleet to the west Kent stream:

The tradition of the country is, that that valley which interposes between the hill, which ascends up to Northfleet, and that which winds up to Swanscamp, was once covered with water, and being locked in on each side with hills, made a secure road for shipping, which invited the Dane to make it a winter station for his navy; and the fame report will tell you likewise, of anchors which have been digged up about the utmost verge of that marsh, which is contiguous to the Thames, and certainly, if we consider the position of this valley, which is nothing but a chain of marshland, interlaced with a stream called Ebbs-fleet, which swells and sinks with the flux and reflux of the adjacent river, and the dimension of their ships, then at that time in use, which were not of any extraordinary bulk, this tradition is not improbable.⁸

This name might have disappeared if it had not been picked up by Hasted in his survey of Kent in 1797. Hasted’s section on the parish of Northfleet has:

PHILIPOTT says, it was the report of the country in his time, that the valley, through which the stream or fleet above mentioned flows, which he calls Ebbsfleet, was once covered with water, and being locked in on each side with hills, made a secure road for shipping, which induced the Danes to make it a winter station for their navy.⁹

Though no details are given of the Philipott work being cited, it must have been the Villare cantianum entry which we have just seen. Hasted’s authority must have been enough for the Ordnance Survey to put the name Ebbsfleet on their maps, and thus we have the modern Ebbsfleet in west Kent.

Conclusion

The east Kent Ebbsfleet is certainly an ancient name, but it is of uncertain etymology. Its modern form has been influenced by the name of the western Ebbsfleet, which is itself an artificial creation of the 17th century. This western Ebbsfleet is an impostor, but destined to become better known than its prototype.
